Hattiban-Rock climbing - FAQs

1. Is rock climbing a risky sport?

No matter your skill level or knowledge base, rock climbing is an inherently dangerous sport. Yes, risk can be minimized but never eliminated.

2. Do many people get hurt when doing rock climbing?

Indoor climbing is particularly safe, but outdoor bouldering and sport climbing are also relatively low-risk. Injury rates and severity are highest in alpine and ice climbing , where external hazards are more difficult to avoid.

3. How to rock climb safely?

Tips to Stay Safe while Climbing

Have a plan. Do you know what to do if someone gets injured, the weather changes, or the trip is taking longer than planned? ...

Know your route. ...

Make sure your group has clear communication terms and knows when to use them. ...

Always wear a helmet.

4. What should you not do when rock climbing?

These days, both sports climbs and ropes come in a wide variety of lengths, increasing the odds of making the misguided mistake of lowering your partner off the end. Make sure the joke isn't on you by tying a stopper knot on the free end before you start climbing.
